Introduction

The United States Census of 2002 confirmed the changing population profile of the United States and Alabama. Approximately one in eight persons are over the age of 65, unprecedented in the history of the United States. The highest percentage of growth was among those 85 and older. Additionally, the number of persons aged 45-64 (the "Baby Boomers") increased by 34% during this same period. At the same time, birth rates have decreased such that future projections will continue the trend of population aging; the percentage of older adults will continue to increase through 2030.

In 2000, approximately 35,000 Alabamians celebrated their 65th birthday and the life-expectancy for an Alabamian who turned 65 was another 16.5 years.

Charting the Course is a program to assist in planning for the long-term healthcare needs of Alabama's Older Citizens. A main component of Charting the Course is a survey of adults aged 55 and older, conducted by the Center for Aging at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. A stratified random sample of 1204 Alabama residents participated in face-to-face interviews completed in August, 2003. These participants were selected to represent the state by rural/urban residence, gender, and age. African-Americans were over-sampled to provide statistical comparisons.

One component of the survey was questionnaire of participants' knowledge of existing services and long term care resources. Section I consisted of twenty-eight true-false questions about services and resources. Section II asked participants if they knew how to get information, arrange for, and/or where to go to receive services.

Following a description of the sample, correct responses to Section I questions are reported for the total sample and by area, age, and race (answers did not significantly differ by sex).

Section II answers are reported by the percent of participants who indicated knowing where to access services. Choices given by more than two percent or more of participants are listed for each service.
